EVEREST DESIGNER JAALIS

The architecture of Medieval Era is considered ahead of its time, and rightfully so. One such design innovation from that time is jaali, which is the term for a perforated stone or latticed screen. Early jaali work was built by carving into stone, generally in geometric patterns, while later the Mughals used very finely carved plant-based designs, as seen in the Taj Mahal. The jaali helps in lowering the temperature by compressing the air through the holes. Also, when the air passes through these openings, its velocity increases giving profound diffusion.

Everest is proud to re-introduce the jaali, in an all-new 21st-century avatar - Everest Designer Jaalis. This new-age solution will enable architects and designers to turn their creativity into reality. Everest Designer Jaalis are completely customisable and can be tailor-made as per your specifications, thus making each piece distinct and innovative. They can sustain prolonged exposure to extreme weather conditions and are cost-efficient, which makes them ideal for internal and external applications in both commercial and residential segments.
